Reflects energy re-distribution for different organs and systems

Energy parameters

- Green area – represent boundaries for practically healthy people;
- Yellow area – represent Energy deficiency (low level of stress in most cases is indication high level of physiological control);
- Red area – zone of attention.

The energy distribution in organs and systems

DIGESTIVE SYSTEM

Parameters may indicate a balanced functioning and apparently healthy physiological status of the digestive system.

ENDOCRINE SYSTEM

Parameters may indicate normal function of the endocrine system, physiological balance of metabolic and enzymatic processes, and satisfactory level of hormones secretion and describe the state of relative physiological norm.

MUSCULOSCELETAR LOCOMOTOR SYSTEM

Parameters may indicate a compensated state of the locomotor system, the normal state of the bones, muscles and absence of serious joint problems.

NERVOUS SYSTEM

Parameters may indicate normal functioning of the nervous processes of the excitability and conduction and describe the state of compensation.

URINO-GENITAL SYSTEM

Parameters may indicate normal function of the urogenital system (balanced and timely processes of formation and excretion of kidneys products, physiological levels of development of the male and female sweat hormones), and characterize the state of relative physiological norm.

CARDIOVASCULAR SYSTEM

Parameters may indicate the normal state of the cardiovascular system functioning. State of the vessel walls and the blood circulation are in a state of physiological norm.

LYMPHATIC SYSTEM

Indicators show satisfactory performance of lymphoid tissue, lymph circulation and lymphatic system of the body.

RESPIRATORY SYSTEM

Parameters may indicate normal function of the respiratory system (inflammations are missing, satisfactory gas exchange and vital capacity of lungs) and characterize the state of relative physiological norm.
